

Consent Planner - Land Use

Permanent Full Time, Richmond

Building great communities through employing great people. Will you be one of them?

The Tasman District boasts three national parks and offers an enviable place to live, work and play. The climate, a beautiful coastline and plenty of opportunity to enjoy the great outdoors are just some of the reasons why people choose to come here.

Based in our Richmond office, you will be responsible for giving professional advice for and processing of Land Use consent applications. Through previous experience you will already be familiar with consent processing and you'll have some knowledge of land legislation and engineering processes associated with land development. To complement your work history, you will have a tertiary qualification in planning, resource management, surveying or similar.

The successful applicant will also demonstrate well-developed problem solving abilities and have an excellent customer service ethos. A working knowledge of LIMs, PIMs and RMA requirements and some experience with subdivision consents would also be a real advantage.

While we envisage the successful applicant will have previous experience in a similar role, we are prepared to consider and train a promising new graduate or person with related work experience. In return, we offer ongoing professional development, a variety of challenging and interesting work, and a benefits package suited to your preferences.
