Ups and downs of rising seas in a shaky nation

Source: www.newsroom.co.nz

Local variations in land movement can double the short-term impacts of sea level rise, or slow the effects to nothing. A New Zealand research programme aims to tell coastal residents how shifting coastlines will change their experience of rising seas.

When a magnitude 7.8 earthquake struck the coast of Kaikoura in 2016, locals heard what they described as a “horrendous” noise – the sound of water rushing off a platform of rock that had suddenly been lifted out of the water.

The newly-exposed land was littered with seaweed and stranded marine life. Nasa satellite images would later reveal that a thin, rocky strip of new coastline had appeared when the quake lifted the seabed by 0.5-2m, along a 20-km stretch of the South Island.

While no-one would choose to experience a quake of this magnitude, there is one threat Kaikoura residents do not need to worry about for now: rising sea levels ...

VALUES/VOICES/VISION CHAMPIONING THE PLANNING PROFESSION TO EXCEL

Join us in Nelson, the centre of New Zealand, for the NZPI 2020 Annual Conference. Explore how we promote the values, voices and vision of the planning profession, and the people we work with. We'll examine the broader role of planning in today's environment, and discuss how planners hear the voices of iwi, the community, and other professions.

You'll be inspired by thought leaders guiding the development of our communities and the management of our natural resources, and discover how planning can influence New Zealand's strategic direction. You'll also experience what the fantastic Nelson region has to offer! Nau mai, haere mai ki Whatatū i te tau ihu ō te waka a Māui.
