Tēnā koutou | ngā āhuatanga o te wā

It has been a rare and surreal couple of months, and although I for one am still working from home, getting out and about still seems a little unnerving, especially as today the Government announced two new cases of Covid 19 after nearly three weeks of no new cases. The landscape has changed significantly for many of us, and our profession has not come out of this without scars, redundancies, significant reductions in forward workloads and cuts to budgets and salaries. The Board is facing the task of grappling with those issues, how they affect the Institute's CPD programme, what it might mean for attendance at branch and national events, and even membership, with the likely effects of Covid 19 being around for several years. I am extremely grateful that this and the previous Board made bold steps toward a strong financial footing which will see us through. We established a risk register earlier in this term of the Board, and our number one risk was cancelling the conference. Our postponement in hindsight was inevitable and we do remain very optimistic that we will be in Nelson next year, albeit with some of our international speakers attending via zoom (or whatever platform works best!).

I do feel proud of how we managed the AGM, it had the best turn out I have seen in many years, we had a very good number of questions and the anecdotal feedback I have had has been positive. The zoom events we have held have been excellent, with very good interaction between speakers, insightful comments and questions. Zoom panels have ...

RMA law promotes healthy waterways

A law that makes crucial environmental improvements to the RMA, particularly for freshwater, has passed its third and final reading today. "Achieving this step in the Government's approach to reforming New Zealand's resource management system is a significant milestone," Environment Minister David Parker said ...

Pedestrianisation could involve big losses

Success in pedestrianising city streets generally occurs in cities with population densities 40 times — or greater — than Dunedin's, an economist says. Further, Dunedin residents could "lose tens of millions of dollars' worth of time and wellbeing" as a result of fewer car parks and slower-moving traffic in the city centre ...

LUNCHTIME SESSION | Urban Design, transportation and growth management in post Covid 19 world

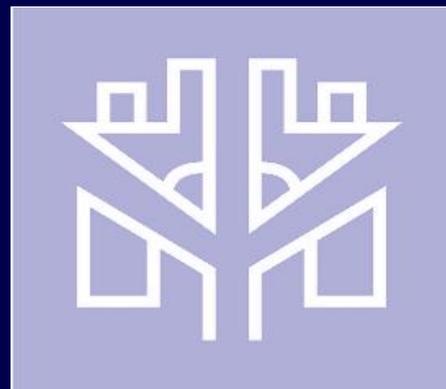

ONLINE VIA ZOOM: 8 July 2020, 12:30 — 1:30pm, 1 CPD Point

Presented by: Ian Munro and Dr Lee Beattie

Auckland, and many other New Zealand centres have a long history of basing urban growth management and urban design strategies around the concepts of transit oriented development, or TOD's and along public transport routes.

We question whether this approach has been conceptualised correctly in the New Zealand context and what this would mean in a post Covid 19 world for urban design and the ability to create resilient communities, as we return to the local?

NZPI Submission on the COVID-19 Recovery (Fast-track Consenting) Bill

The New Zealand Planning Institute has prepared a short submission on the COVID-19 Recovery (Fast-track Consenting) Bill. The submission deals with: Ministerial decision-making powers; the capability of the Ministry in assessing projects put forward for fast-tracking; and public participation. NZPI has asked to be heard by the Select Committee in support of this submission.

NZPI CPD Spotlight on ...

Emerging Technologies and Resource Management

22-23 July, 9:00 - 12:00pm, online.

Technology is changing our world faster than ever before. This course is designed to give the experienced planner an understanding of these emerging technologies, and to incorporate this awareness into practice. New technologies are leading to changes in the activities and resources we manage and offer new opportunities for protecting the natural environment and managing effects.

This course gives an understanding of how the world is changing in what is termed the fourth industrial revolution. Key technology trends such as artificial intelligence, machine learning, data, digital trade, drones and Internet of Things are explained. The course also delves into some of the deeper attitudes or principles behind these changes such as open data, transparency, security and privacy.
